THIS DATE IN HOCKEY EAST HISTORY

Nov. 2, 1991: Former NHL star Bruce Crowder earns his first victory as UMass Lowell's head coach as the River Hawks defeat Elmira, 9-2, in the first round of the USAir Classic in Providence, R.I.

Nov. 3, 1978: Gary Conn set a school record with five goals against Mt. Allison. The record was tied later by Jay Mazur in 1987 and again by Brian Flynn and 2010.

COMMISSIONER'S CORNER by Joe Bertagna

Having observed college hockey as a player, a coach and an administrator for more than 40 years, I think I have reached a stage where I can keep things in perspective and, as a result, I don't tend to elevate each game or individual performance or season to "best I've seen" status easily.

Friday night, as part of my commissioner duties, I happily attended the NCAA Championship banner raising ceremony at Boston College's Conte Forum. Standing in the visitor's penalty box while the ceremony unfolded, I was happy to see such luminaries as former Boston College coach Len Ceglarski and his teammate from BC's 1949 NCAA champs, Giles Threadgold, who I knew as a colorful referee. (Two words that don't often go together.)

Then came the video. When you saw the numbers that chronicled the Boston College decade-long accomplishments, it was hard not to be impressed and to realize that for all the celebrations and all that has been written and said, perhaps what Jerry York has done over the past ten years has actually been under-appreciated. The one statistic that really caught my eye: five NCAA championship games in ten years. Only 58 people can really appreciate how hard that is: the 58 NCAA Division I head coaches. In a "records are made to be broken" world, that one might not be matched in a very long time.
